

Basic Detail Report

Title Embroidered Silk and Cotton Shawl (Phulkari)

Date 20th century

Medium Cotton, floss silk

Description This silk, embroidered shawl, or phulkari is densely embroidered in a lattice pattern, with red silk thread on white cotton cloth. Translated from Sanskrit, the word phulkari means “floral work” from phul (flower) and kari (work). The art of phulkari was practiced by women across many social positions in the Punjab region, now northern India and the Punjab province of Pakistan Traditionally, phulkari making was a personal, creative practice; young girls were taught to embroider by their mothers, and each developed their own unique style within their family group. With its surface entirely covered with embroidery, this type of phulkari is called bagh, meaning “garden.” These elaborate textiles could take months or even years to create. They were presented to brides on their wedding day and passed as heirlooms from one generation to the next.

Basic Detail Report

Dimensions Overall: 47 1/2 x 91 1/2 in. (120.7 x 232.4cm)