Title Polychrome Spandrel-Shaped Tile Panel with Floral and Arabesque Motifs

Date 1938-1939

Medium Ceramic, polychrome pigments

Description These bright yellow tiles outline the two arches of Shangri La's courtyard. The tiles are embellished with large floral motifs with delicate green stems and serrated leaves. Although the designs emulate the style of the Safavid dynasty (1501-1722 CE), these tiles were created in the 1930s. Following a trip to Iran, Doris Duke commissioned contemporary craftsmen to create tile panels based on the recently renovated mosque, Masjid-i-Shah in Isfahan Iran. Masjid-i-Shah (the Shah's mosque) was constructed between 1612 to 1630 CE by the Safavid ruler and patron of the arts, Shah 'Abbas I. During the Pahlavi rule of Iran in the twentieth
